A Disobedient Soldier
"Now, lads, there's the battery; remember the Emperor himself is watching you, and carry it in true French style. The moment you get into it, make yourself fast against attack; and mind that any man who comes out to pick up the wounded, even though I myself should be among them, shall be tried for disobedience as soon as the battle's over."

Sergeant C. J. Lusselle to his French grenadiers just before the charge that decided the battle of Waterloo. "Then he waved his sword and shouted 'Eh, avant!'"

Forward swept the grenadiers like a torrent, with the shout which the Austrians opposed to them already knew to their cost. Through the blinding smoke and pelting shot they rushed headlong on, with mouths parched, faces burning and teeth set like a vise. Ever and anon a red flash rent the murky cloud around them, and the cannon shot came tearing through their ranks, mowing them down like grass. But not a man flinched, for the same thought was in every mind, that they were fighting under the eye of the "Little Corporal," as they affectionately called the terrible Napoleon.

Suddenly the smoke parted and right in front of him appeared the dark muzzles of the cannon, and the white uniforms of the Austrian soldiers. One last shout, which rose high above all the roar of the battle, the bayonets went glittering over the breastwork like the spray of a breaking wave, and the battle was won.

"Where's the colonel?" cried a voice, suddenly.

There was no answer. The handful of men that remained of the doomed band looked musingly at each other, but no one spoke. Strict discipline as he was, seldom passing a day without punishing some one, the old colonel had, nevertheless, won men's hearts completely by his reckless courage in battle; and every man in the regiment would gladly have risked his life to save that of "the old warrior," as they called him.

But if he were not with them, where was he? On the left the battery the whole ground was secured into files of dust by a storm of bullets from the light that was still raging on the left. In such a case fire it seemed as if nothing living could escape, and if he had fallen there, there was but little hope for him.

"I see him," said a tall grenadier. "He's lying on yonder, and alive too, for I saw him wave his hand just now. I'll have him here in five minutes, or he'll be left there beside him."

"But you mustn't disobey orders, Dubois," said a young captain (now the oldest surviving officer, so terrible had been the havoc), hoping by this means to stop the reckless man from rushing upon a ruinous death. "Remember what the colonel told you—that even if he were left among the wounded, no one must go out to pick him up."

"I can't help that," answered the soldier, laying down his musket and tightening the straps of his cross belt.

"Captain, report Private Dubois for insubordination and breach of discipline, I'm going out to bring in the colonel."

And he stepped forth undauntedly into the deadly space beyond.

The sun him approach the spot where the colonel lay; they saw him bend over the fallen man, shielding him from the shot with his own body. Then he was seen to stagger suddenly, as if from a blow; but the next moment he had the colonel in his arms and was struggling back over the shot torn ground, through the dying and the dead. Twice he stopped short as it seemed to him that he was about to fall, but he had just laid his officer gently down inside the battery, when, with his comrades' shout of welcome still ringing in his ears he fell fainting to the earth, covered with blood.

By the next morning Col. Lusselle had recovered sufficiently to amuse the whole regiment by punning under arrest the man who had saved his life; but the moment it was done the colonel moved his
